Detailed Description of the Collection

Series I: Original Interview Footage

Video Oral History Interview with Valerie Norman-Gammon, Section A2012_233_001_001, TRT: 1:30:19 ?

Valerie Norman-Gammon talks about her mother's family background. Her mother, Irene Hall, was born on October 7, 1926, in Senatobia, Mississippi to Verma Clair and Allen Hall. Clair and Hall divorced, and Clair spent much of her life picking tomatoes in Memphis, Tennessee. Norman-Gammon describes the sights, sounds, and smells of her childhood visits to Memphis, Tennessee, like picking tomatoes with her grandmother and watching her grandmother make ice cream. Norman-Gammon also shares memories of her great-grandmother, Mary Lee Armstrong. Irene Hall moved to New York City, New York around 1945, after which she met Norman-Gammon's father, Edmund Greene, a wealthy businessman. He and Norman-Gammon met secretly for the first time when she was nineteen, and their relationship lasted a little over a year. Norman-Gammon talks about her mother's jobs at the American Stock Exchange and Bergdorf Goodman's, and concludes by describing the building where she grew up in Upper West Side Manhattan, New York City.

Valerie Norman-Gammon lists her favorites. She describes her early childhood memories of playing in front of her Manhattan apartment building, and her birthday parties. She talks about her mother's move from Memphis, Tennessee to New York City, and the sacrifices she made to keep their Upper West Side Manhattan apartment. Though she grew up in the Upper West Side, Norman-Gammon spent time in Harlem. As a result, she was aware of race issues, but did not experience them directly. Norman-Gammon discovered her love of reading in grade school, and became interested in journalism in high school after she joined her school's writing club. Norman-Gammon attended Louis D. Brandeis High School in New York City, New York, where she graduated in 1968. She then attended Manhattan Community College for two years before enrolling in Baruch College, getting married, and working as a paralegal. After graduating from Baruch College in 1979, and received a full scholarship to the University of Michigan in Ann-Arbor, Michigan.

Valerie Norman-Gammon married Marvin Norman and moved to New Jersey in 1972, while working as a paralegal and attending Baruch College. The two divorced in 1975, and Norman-Gammon moved back to New York City, New York, where she continued to balance work and school. After graduating from college in 1979, Norman-Gammon moved to Ann Arbor, Michigan to attend graduate school at the University of Michigan. While attending a journalism conference in Washington, D.C., Norman-Gammon met television executive Cindy Walker. Walker offered Norman-Gammon a position co-hosting “Good Morning Youngstown” in Youngstown, Ohio in 1980, which she accepted. In 1981 she moved to Chicago, Illinois to work for Cindy Walker at WBBM-TV. Though she was offered an anchoring position, Norman-Gammon negotiated with Walker and became producer of “Common Ground,” a late-night talk show. Norman-Gammon concludes the tape by talking about people she met while producing the show.

Valerie Norman-Gammon talks about producing “Common Ground” and the “Lee Phillip Show,” and her relationship with Lee Phillip Bell. Norman-Gammon struggled to maintain political impartiality on “Common Ground,” which was stressful in light of Chicago, Illinois’ electric political culture in the 1980s. Norman-Gammon coped with this stress by lying in the sun, reading for pleasure, and listening to music. Norman-Gammon recalls the excitement she felt upon Mayor Harold Washington’s election in 1983. Norman-Gammon built strong personal friendships with individuals like Renee Ferguson, Lamont Neal, and Oprah Winfrey during her time at WBBM-TV. She left her position as senior producer at the station in 1988, and worked for a year to co-author a book with Dr. Terry Mason. Norman-Gammon also founded her own production company in 1988, and successfully produced the second Essence Awards show in Chicago, Illinois. She concludes the tape by talking about the entertainment and journalism communities in Chicago, Illinois.

Valerie Norman-Gammon talks about producing the Essence Awards Show, which she did for a decade. She details the evolution of the show from dinner, to stage show, to televised event. Norman-Gammon began producing Cancun Jazz Music Festival in the 1990s. She talks about the development and the production of the festival, as well as her production of similar music festivals through Mexico and the Caribbean. In 1995, she began working with Sinbad to develop the idea for, and produce, the Sinbad Soul Music Festival, as well. Norman-Gammon talks about her membership in Apostolic Church of God in Chicago, Illinois, and her relationship with the pastor, Bishop Brazier, which eventually led to a radio show and the Emmy Award-winning televised event, Christmas Glory. Norman-Gammon hopes to increase community outreach by producing more televised church events. She concludes the tape by talking about her collaboration with Quincy Jones on the show, "The History of Rock n Roll."

Valerie Norman-Gammon talks about her contributions to the Essence Music Festival, which she produced from 1995 to 2002. Norman-Gammon also talks about her husband, advertising executive Parker Gammon. The two met in 1979 while Norman-Gammon was a graduate student in Michigan, but their lives went separate ways. They reconnected in 1995, and married in 1996 in Chicago, Illinois. The couple moved to Miami in 2008, where Norman-Gammon teaches at Johnson and Wales University and the University of Miami, oversees event production, and continues to produce projects. Norman-Gammon comments on the highs and lows of her life, including winning three NAACP Image Awards and her regret at not having children. She also talks about her family. In the future, Norman-Gammon hopes to continue her outreach work with young people and women. She reflects upon the women in her life she has admired, and concludes the tape by talking about how she would like to be remembered.
